karol@butzel.com

Catherine M. Karol practices in Butzel's Detroit office, where she specializes in commercial transactions and regulatory compliance with numerous automotive and advertising clients. Ms. Karol is also active in addressing emerging legal issues – she coordinated a multidisciplinary team within Butzel to counsel clients on the Sections 301 and 232 tariffs, she advises new manufacturers of Electric Vehicles on US dealer distribution issues, and she participated in the Butzel team that is involved in the ongoing development of autonomous vehicle regulation.

Additionally, she coordinated a multidisciplinary team within Butzel to counsel clients on the Sections 301 and 232 tariffs, and represents numerous clients in an action in the International Court of Trade challenging the validity of the 301 (China) tariffs.

Ms. Karol acquired a broad depth of experience during her long career on the General Motors Legal Staff, where she advised all levels of management on a wide range of global legal and business issues. She developed and implemented strategies for issue resolution at many levels, including dealer lawsuits, FTC and State Attorney General lawsuits, and NHTSA recalls. She negotiated complex multi-million dollar global transactions and relationships with other OEMs, Tier One parts and services suppliers, and major financial institutions. She worked with the GM dealer organizations on their Dealer Sales and Service Agreements, and she developed and implemented the legal strategy for the HUMMER Dealer

International Trade and Customs Specialty Team

Trade policy continues to evolve swiftly, with significant shifts in the US Government's approach under the Trump administration and subsequent leadership. The traditional commitment to reducing tariffs and trade barriers has given way to a more nationalistic strategy focused on protecting US jobs, addressing trade imbalances, and countering perceived unfair trade practices. Policies including the imposition of Section 301 tariffs on Chinese goods, the renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) into the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA), and increased enforcement of antidumping and countervailing duties have reshaped the international trade landscape.

This rapidly evolving environment has resulted in a surge of new regulations, customs enforcement actions, and trade investigations. The volatility in international trade necessitates strategic legal guidance more than ever before. Importers and exporters have a growing need for expert legal advice—Butzel's trade practice is ready to serve clients in a variety of industries, whether small entities or multi-continental corporations.

Butzel's International Trade and Customs Specialty Team is comprised of international trade lawyers, customs lawyers, and tariff lawyers that possess decades of experience and insight to help businesses navigate these complexities. Our clients seek our counsel to resolve trade-related challenges, to ensure compliance with US and global trade laws, and to proactively prepare for potential disruptions in supply chains and market access. Our clients can depend on us when it comes to any aspect of doing international business, including drafting and negotiating trade agreements.

We help clients with a variety of international trade, customs, and tariff and duty matters:
