Financial Crisis Task Force

As a response to the meltdown of the financial markets, Butzel Long has created The Financial Crisis Task Force, based out of our New York office. Comprised of a diverse group of specialized attorneys from multiple practices and offices, the group is focused on analyzing new regulations and emerging legislation in order to identify potential problems for our clients and develop feasible, creative solutions.

Task Force members represent a comprehensive range of disciplines, including those with experience in real estate and mortgage issues, bankruptcy and financial litigation, and corporate lawyers skilled in the instruments at the heart of the financial crisis. Butzel Long's long-standing ties to the automotive industry uniquely position the Firm and our Task Force to combine bankruptcy, corporate, and automotive expertise to address the impact of the automotive and financial crisis at hand.

The Financial Crisis Task Force meets regularly to scrutinize the evolving rescue legislation for both Wall Street and Detroit. As the nation moves into a new administration and Congress, we expect governmental initiatives to continually evolve in an effort to stabilize the financial situation. Butzel Long's Financial Crisis Task Force is persistently monitoring these events and developing solutions for our clients. Our multi-disciplinary approach will bring to bear all the resources necessary to address specific client problems that may arise from this crisis.
