Webinar on tap to teach businesses the essentials as Michigan soon becomes right-to-work state

2.18.2013

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

DETROIT, Mich. – Michigan businesses may not yet realize it, but they have much to do before the “right-to-work” laws take effect in the state next month. Employers need new procedures and the planning process can be overwhelming – especially for front-line human resources (HR) professionals.

Help is coming through thanks to a free, one-hour, interactive webinar on “right-to-work” issues to be conducted by the Michigan Council of the Society for Human Resource Management (MISHRM) and Butzel Long at 12 noon on Thursday, March 7, 2013.

The webinar will feature a panel discussion featuring attorneys from Butzel Long’s Labor and Employment Law Practice Group. The moderator is Gary W. Klotz. Panelists include Robert A. Boonin and Craig S. Schwartz.

The webinar will highlight the following:

- Michigan’s “right-to-work” laws and how they may impact unions and collective bargaining strategies including potential union requests to extend current contracts before the law becomes effective on March 28, 2013
- Issues regarding how to administer dues check-offs
- How the new “right-to-work” legal environment may affect non-unionized employers and their tactics for staying union-free and,
- The potential legal challenges to the new laws.

“While the concept of ‘right-to-work’ may sound quite simple, the legal obligations of employers (particularly unionized employers) under the new Michigan statutes, may in fact be
